Blame For Bond Issues on Stockholders
Who Were Given No Choice in the Matter,
According to Record Only After the Bills Had Been Incurred.

Shares of only $1.464 is anticipated in the operation of the Community Hotel, the Virginia Dare, this year. This was brought out at what was planned as a disheartening stockholders' last Friday night. It is beginning to seem that one may be too eager to throw this hotel into a

U.S.C.G. Made A Triple Mid Night Rescue

A power surfboat, at Oregon Inlet Coast Guard station saved three fishing vessels from the treacherous shoals of the Inlet, when coast guards, under Capt. John Wescott of the Oregon Inlet Station pulled off the trawlers Rayner of Hampton, the Pompano of Elizabeth City, and the C. H. Mallison of Manteo, which went aground, and jeopardized cargo, and vessels valued at $50,000 or more.

Capt. Wescott, who has several times been to the rescue of stranded men and property during the past year, took several men of his crew, and with the power surfboat, stationed at the inlet, pulled off the vessels about 12 o'clock Friday night. The boats went ashore at night, when they lost their compasses amid the shoals. Each boat had a crew of five men.

The Rayner of Hampton is operated by Capt. John Rollins of Manteo, the Mallison by Capt. Claude Brothers of Wanchese, and the Pompano by Capt. E. R. Gallop of Wanchese. The rescue of these vessels is considered a notable piece of work, considering the small size of the surfboat used in pulling them off. The regular crew consisting of Nelson Midgett, and Garland Hooper, took part in the rescue.

Minstrel at Weeks- ville High Tonight

Blackface comedians, pretty girls and good musical talent will feature the Orange Blossoms Minstrel at Weeksville High School tonight. The minstrel is being sponsored by the Weeksville Parent-Teachers Association and the proceeds will be used to improve the school grounds. In the minstrel will be members of the faculty and students of Weeksville High School as well as imported talent from Elizabeth City. The curtain will rise promptly at 8:00 o'clock and all who like to laugh are urged to be on hand.

THE BANK CLERK AND THE SODA JERKER
OLD SAINT NICK WILL SHAKE 'EM LOOSE

"I wonder if this is going to be a dull Christmas," asked the Soda Jerker. "Folks don't seem to be loosening up like they usually do at Christmas times; our business ain't what it ought to be."

"Don't worry," said the Bank Clerk. "Folks always loosen up at Christmas times; there'll be almost as much Christmas stuff bought in Elizabeth City this Christmas as in previous years. Folks may tighten up at the beginning of the Christmas shopping season, but when Christmas gets in the air and in their bones, they relent, soften and loosen up."

"This year will be no exception; a lot of our merchants have intimidated much business by complaining of hard times and telling everybody what a hard time they're having with their collections, but by the latter part of next week everybody will have forgotten much of that bear talk and business will be brisk until closing time Christmas Eve night. I've never known it to fail."

"Christmas is for women folk and children and women and children are not practical creatures to be side-tracked with hard luck stories; they want what they want when they want it and they are going to have their Christmas."

"The old man will grunt and squirm and bellow and say this is the poorest year he ever had, but

WARREN GETS IMPORTANT ASSIGNMENTS

The assignment of Congressman Lindsay Warren to the Committee on Library is of unique significance to his local constituency and to the friends of the Wright Memorial. It was in the Committee on Library that Senator Bingham of Connecticut blocked the Wright Memorial appropriation last winter, while the North Carolina Congressman stood helplessly outside the Committee room.

Congressman Warren's assignment to the Committee on Library places him in a position to combat the gentleman from Connecticut. Young Mr. Warren has established himself firmly in the confidence of House leaders and is rapidly winning place among the outstanding members of that national legislative body.

Several changes were made in the committee assignments of Congressman Lindsay C. Warren of the First District. Mr. Warren was slated by the democratic members of the Ways and Means committee, who select committee assignments to the democratic exclusive committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce one of the five great committees of Congress, and hence there was no vacancy.

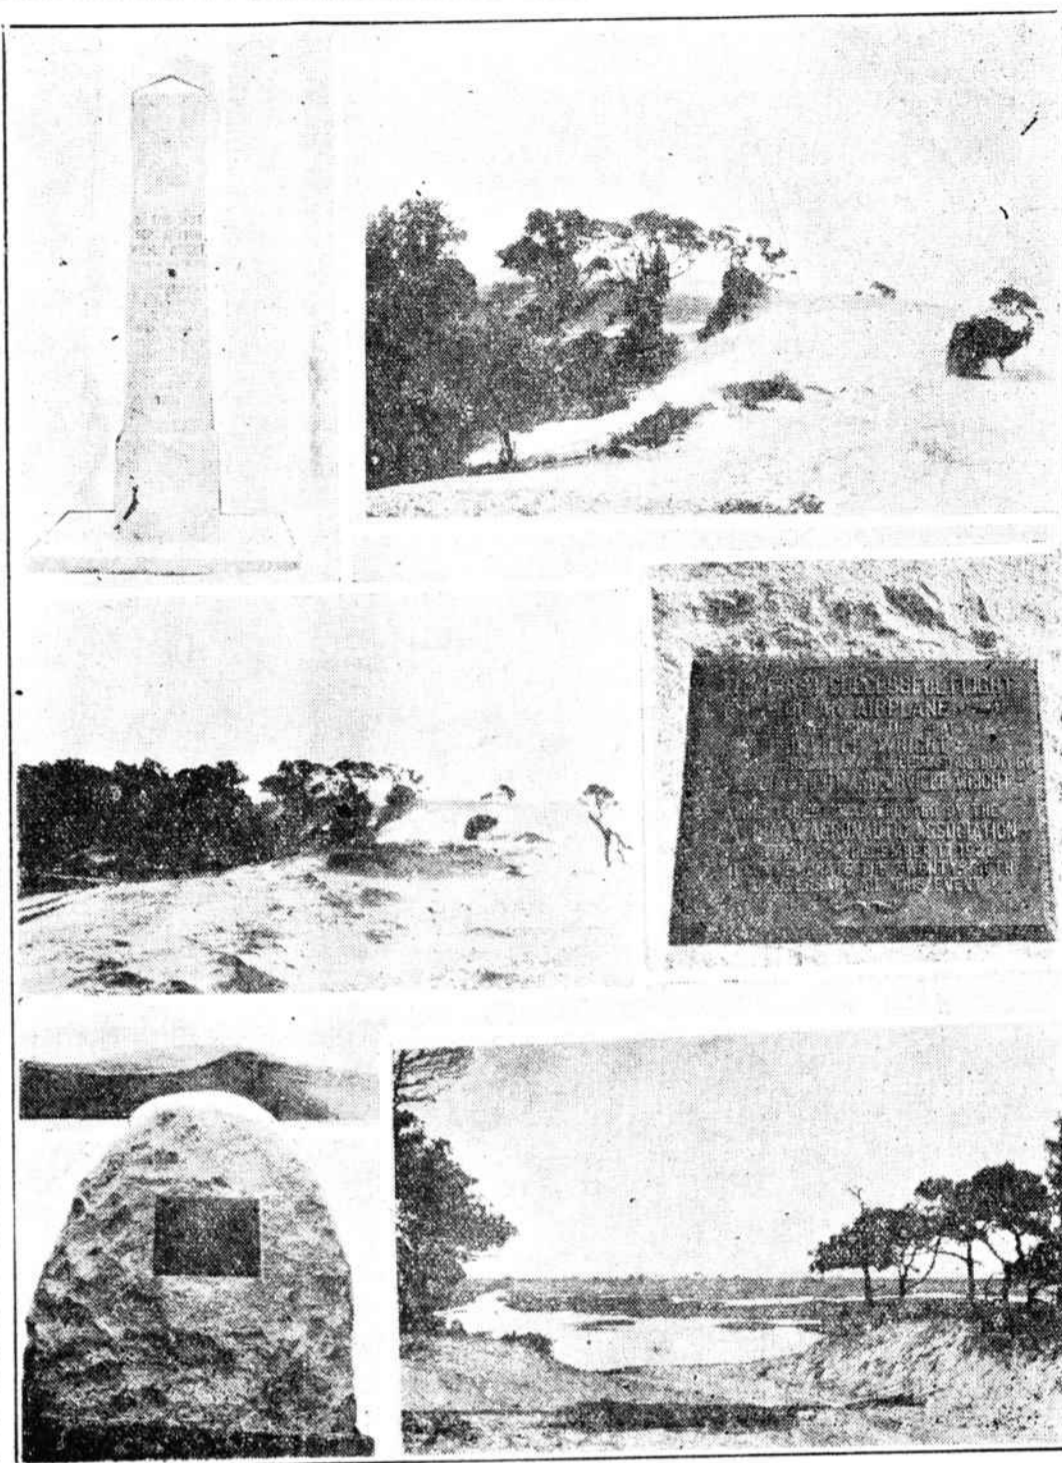

Congressman Warren becomes the ranking democrat on the powerful Accounts Committee, and should his party carry the House next year would become its chairman. The Chairman has more patronage than any committee in Congress; has eight clerks and a suite of offices in the Capitol.

Mr. Warren was made the ranking democrat on the Committee of the Library, a new assignment for him, and in event of democratic control would become its chairman, should he desire. Upon demand of the party organization, he was placed on Election Committee No. 2, in order to handle the contested election case of his close friend Congressman Milligan of Missouri, who was elected to the House by 30 majority. The First District member rose in rank on the Roads Committee to fourth place among the democrats. Mr. Warren tendered his resignation from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, where he had risen to third place.

Freight Reduction On Cotton In Bales

Farmers of this section will welcome the news of a freight reduction on cotton in bales from Elizabeth City to Norfolk. The rate will be reduced from thirty-seven and a half cents per hundred pounds to twenty cents per hundred pounds. This rate reduction will apply not only from Elizabeth City to Norfolk but from all points north of the Albemarle Sound, on the Norfolk Southern Railroad and will also apply on the Suffolk & Carolina Railroad and its Elizabeth City branch.

Around and About Kill Devil Hills

RUPERT E. WEST backs up his argument for a national park memorial to the Wright Brothers with some interesting photos of the Kill Devil Hills region near Kitty Hawk. More picturesque dunes and fresh ponds do not exist in America. The clock in the upper left hand corner stands in the yard of the Methodist Parsonage at Kitty Hawk where Wilbur and Orville Wright first lived and worked at Kitty Hawk. The boulder shown in the lower left hand corner was erected on the spot of the first Wright flight by the American Aeronautic Association last December. The bronze plate on this boulder is shown in the right center of the layout. Now read "A Fitting Tribute to the Pioneers of the Air" by Rupert E. West.

A Fitting Tribute To The Pioneers Of The Air

By RUPERT E. WEST

In this, a day in which aviation holds the foremost place in current history when records for distance and endurance are broken almost hourly, no one dares a prophesy as to what a day may bring forth. Air machines encircle the globe in less time than even the visionary Verne predicted. They have remained in the air in continuous flight for more than four hundred hours; even now air machines are winging their way into remote parts of the world in search of new discoveries, and as true Americans we hasten to acclaim those who add to the laurels of aviation, yet we are prone to forget the two who, more than a quarter of a century ago, made our present day achievements in the air possible.

The very machine that made the first flight in the history of the world, an outcast from the land of its birth, remains in Kensington, England. It is not that the Wrights are unhonored or that their honor is unsung; the names, Wilbur and Orville Wright, are written in the archives of history, names that time itself cannot erase. It is not that they ask recognition, the fact that they accomplished what they set out to do is all the reward they cared for.

The purpose then of this article is not to criticize but to remind the fellowmen of Wilbur and Orville Wright that the proper recognition of their efforts in creating a new epoch in the world's progress has not been given. In the rapid trend of daily events, particularly those concerning aeronautics, we have been too busily engaged in keeping up with present day conquests of the air to give thought to the two men who on September 17, 1900 at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina began the assembly of their first experimental glider; and who on December 17, 1903, on this same wind swept coast, in a machine designed and built by themselves, made the first successful aeroplane flight in the history of the world.

A quarter of a century elapsed before we, as a nation, so much craving winds, in a setting like of which there is no duplicate on the face of the earth. To the east lies the blue waters of the mighty Atlantic Ocean whose white tipped waves caress the shores with tireless energy. To the west lie the quiet waters of beautiful Kitty Hawk Bay which reflect with mirror like accuracy the blue skies, the low hanging clouds and golden sunsets of balmy days. To the south, like a giant emerald in a setting of old gold, lies a lake of cool waters fed for any length of time.

On December 17, 1928 the cornerstone for this memorial was laid. Representatives from the four corners of the earth were present. They traveled thousands of miles to pay homage to the two men who, a quarter of a century before, had conquered the air.

On that day they assembled at the top of the Kill Devil Hills, the huge sand dunes from which the first glider sailed off into space. They watched in awed silence the laying of the stone that marked the very spot from which the experimental glider took off, the first official mark of recognition ever accorded the birthplace of aviation.

There in a realm of Nature's beautiful setting, we as a nation made our first effort to pay tribute to the Wrights on the very spot on which they labored untiringly and at the risk of their own lives, and made possible man's greatest achievement, the science of flying.

That was a beginning. The plans for the final development of this memorial to the Wrights remained in the hands of the Committee of Fine Arts. It has been left for them to decide just what form this memorial shall take.

The world's foremost artists have conjured their brain in an effort to plan a memorial of stone and mortar that will be worthy of marking the birthplace of aviation, unmindful of the fact that Nature herself has planned and erected a memorial of such stupendous magnitude and wondrous beauty that any effort of man must be considered but punitive.

The Kill Devil Hills themselves are masterpieces of Nature's handiwork; giant dunes of glistening sands all tenantless save for the

MR. E. F. AYDLETT, OLD AND PETULANT, RESIGNS

Was Vice President Savings Bank & Trust Co.
—Resignation Unexpected—Directors to Act Upon His Resignation Today

The Board of Directors of the Savings Bank & Trust Company will meet this afternoon, act upon the resignation of Mr. E. F. Aydlett, vice-president of the institution. Meanwhile Elizabeth Citizens cogitate and speculate upon the reasons governing Mr. Aydlett's resignation from a position which he has held for many years.

Marion Love Reunites With His Ex-Wife

Pleased were friends of Marion C. Love, in 1925, when he married Miss Margaret Foreman, one of the town's most popular young society women. Surprised were these friends when Mr. Love went to Reno last year and secured a divorce. Shocked were they Tuesday morning when Marion Love again married his ex-wife and thus completed the cycle.

Marion Love and Margaret Foreman were married at the First Methodist Church in 1926 in one of the most beautiful church weddings ever solemnized in this city. It looked to be a good match. He was popular, industrious and a successful business man. She was young, popular, attractive. But something went wrong. The bride returned to her mother even before the honeymoon was over. The cause of the break never leaked out except in unconfirmed rumors.

Then Marion Love, heartbroken, lost his grip on himself, neglected his business, was declared bankrupt. He went to Reno, secured a divorce, returned to Elizabeth City and re-established himself in business. His packing plant has prospered and he has got back on his feet. Elizabeth Citizens thought that he had forgotten his ex-wife. Elizabeth Citizens thought wrong. He loved her devotedly and even the divorce could not wipe out the love he held for the mother of his child. So they were again married this week.

The marriage was kept very quiet and none except members of the two families and a few intimate friends knew anything at all about it until after the ceremony. The bride and groom walked down the aisle of the First Methodist Church for the second time, were married by a different minister this time. They went on a short wedding trip to Greensboro, since Mr. Love was unable to be away from his business for any length of time.

—Well, well, here's a funny one. John R. Frisby, of Marshall, was twice tried for the murder of his son, Erna, and was finally acquitted last February. This week he swore out a warrant for Mrs. Mary Frisby, Erna's wife, charging her with the murder of her husband. Mrs. Frisby is being held without bond in the county jail pending hearing of the case at the February term of court.

"If At First You Try---"

THIS, then, is Mr. and Mrs. Marion C. Love, who were quietly married at the First Methodist Church Tuesday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Love tried the matrimonial venture once, failed, have now decided to try it again.

This Bank Allays the Feeling of Uneasiness

In the midst of business depression, such statements as the First & Citizens National Bank makes in its advertisement in this newspaper this week are reassuring, allay apprehension and feeling of uneasiness on the part of the public.

Since the First National was established here in 1891, its capital has increased from the modest sum of $50,000 to $200,000. In addition to this increase in capital, the bank has accumulated a surplus of $200,000, which it always has on reserve for the protection of its depositors.

The bank has paid out to its stockholders $550,000. In other words, a man who held one share of stock in the bank when it was established has collected $550 in dividends and still has his share of stock. This week the directors of the bank met, declared a six percent semi-annual dividend, four percent regular and two percent extra representing an annual return of 12 percent on investment.

Said an official of the bank: "There is just as much money today as there was a year or five years ago. No one throws any money away or uses it to light cigarette with. There is money in the bank but the man on the street is temporarily short of cash. The unusual conditions of this year will soon revert back to normal; as money will be distributed and freely."
